A: I'm reading your question, you are trying to find the plugin that you downloaded from web, do that on your hard drive if the folder path is /home/user, you can run the following command: `find / -name 'YourPluginFolder-*.js'` This will list all the *.js files, those which match will be the plugins. Q: Combining transitive and reflexive properties of an object in java I'm working in a little project using an api that has both an object and methods for it, but I'm not sure what is the best way to set the receiver as the default class for methods. For example, if I have a method with the signature `void someMethod(Object o)` that for example gets references by reference and calls another method with the signature `void someOtherMethod(Object o)` it will work if the receiver is not specified but I'm not sure if it's the best way. I suppose it can be done by passing the receiver as a parameter but I get confused with the position of that parameter within the method's signature. `int someMethod(Object o) { someOtherMethod(o); //this will not work } int someOtherMethod(Object o) { //... } I get this configuration because I don't know how do I put the receiver as the default class for a method or what is the best way to solve this. A: You can use the this keyword to define the receiver. So, instead of void someMethod(Object o), use void someMethod(Object this). I believe this will work. You can find the documentation for how this works in the javadocs Q: Adding library to a library in LLDB I am trying to add libc++ to lldb, however I am getting an error: Undefined symbols for architecture x86_64: "std::__1::basic_string, std::__1::allocator >::erase(std::__1::basic_string, std::__1::allocator > const&)", referenced from: _`
