One hundred and fifty-eight patients with myopia and/or astigmatism were treated with photorefractive keratectomy, using the VISX UV200 excimer laser. A plano-equivalent ametropia (myopia +/- 1.00 D, astigmatism +/- 1.50 D) was achieved in 57% of patients with spherical refractive error less than 3.75 D and in 53% of patients with spherical refractive error more than 3.75 D. The remaining 43% of patients required a uni- or bilateral myopic laser-assisted in situ keratomileusis. Mean spherical equivalent refraction was -1.42 +/- 1.88 D preoperatively and -0.23 +/- 0.92 D at three months postoperatively. By three months, eight eyes (4.7%) lost 2 or more Snellen lines of corrected visual acuity due to undercorrection. One eye (0.6%) lost 3 or more Snellen lines of corrected visual acuity due to overcorrection. The most common subjective complaint following photorefractive keratectomy was night glare. Other common complications included haze, photochemical and thermal burns, regression, and infection. Three eyes (2.1%) developed intraoperative lenticular damage. One patient (0.6%) developed peripheral retinal scarring or chorioretinal atrophy at the end of the treatment. We conclude that photorefractive keratectomy is a safe and effective treatment 6d1f23a050
