The average American will spend $14,068 on healthcare this year, $35,000 over a lifetime. A large chunk of that money comes from one of three major expense categories: prescription drugs, hospital care, and doctor and outpatient services. They are the top three for AARP. A big cost on all three fronts is Medicare Part D plans. According to the AARP, the government program will cost $8,423 per person this year, $14,349 per person by 2020, and $19,723 per person by 2025. The reason why is simple: Medicare Part D plans have high deductibles and many just pay part of the expenses, leaving the rest to the patient. Many seniors are forced to choose between paying for healthcare and necessities such as food, utilities, or paying for rent, according to the AARP. Medicare is an all-in-one plan that some people can choose to take advantage of. Medicare Part D is an add-on plan that most people choose to purchase separately. If you're not enrolled in a Medicare Part D plan, the average annual cost for a person over the age of 65 is around $2,400, according to the Kaiser Family Foundation. There are numerous plans on the market, offering varying benefits and plan types. Those looking for the least expensive plans should look at what's known as Medicare simple plans. AARP recommends having your deductible set to equal 10 percent of what you earn, after all other deductions are taken out. You don't need a prescription drug plan if you only pay a $120 annual premium for Medicare. But if you're a heavy user of prescription drugs, you can sign 6d1f23a050
